Books from the Library of Erik Naggum.

INTRODUCTION

THIS catalogue contains books from the library of Erik Naggum (1965 – 2009), the Norwegian computer programmer. Wikipedia has an entry on him which provides an outline of his achievements.

While computing is by far the largest topic, with many languages, from Lisp and C++ to Dylan and Python well -represented, and numerous items on database design to artificial intelligence, there is also a considerable quantity of philosophy, mathematics, and general reference and English language material, and a decent number of titles on Objectivism.

A table of contents is provided to help in locating material. Please also use ctrl-F; an author you may be seeking can be in more than one subject area – for example Feynman in computing and physics.

Finally, I would like to thank Erik's family for their assistance.

Richard Phillips.

- 4to. 21.5cm x 27.6cm. 4to. Duplicated copies of the original Unix System III programmer's manuals - presumed as issued by Bell Labs to clients - bound in stiff pale beige card wraps, with transparent acetate covers. To front covers, the logo of Altos Computer Systems, and below its address and contacts details. To verso of title page, "copyright, Western Electric Company, Incorporated." Western Electric, the manufacturing arm of AT&T, owned a half share in Bell Labs. Altos, a 1979 start-up, focused on "multi-user and networked UNIX computer systems for commercial markets." (Wikipedia); it was sold to Acer in 1990. System III was first released outside of Bell Labs in 1982. System III, a precursor to System V - there was no official System IV - was designed to run on PDP-11 and VAX machines. The book contains a series of introductory essays on Unix utilities, the source code control system, virtual protocol machine and compilers, among others. Each essay individually paginated. All essays attributed to staff at Bell Labs. Minor marks to the acetate covers, light soil to page edges. The type is clear and legible; pages clean, unmarked, binding firm, both volumes very nice copies. Not in COPAC; only one copy referenced in WorldCat. Uncommon. Near Fine. Original Wraps. (#00001473)*
